Syllabus. By the Court. Dawson, J.

1. The act of March 5, 1862, entitled,

"An act to restrain the isuing of county warrants," (Gen. Stat. 1999, 2311, et seq.) is still in full force and effect, except as modified by later ensetments fixing maximum tax levies for current county expenses. imum tax levies for current county expenses.

2. The case of Bartiett, Treas, v. A. T. & S. F. Rid. Co., 32 Kan. 134, 4 Pac. 178, examined and held to have had no concern with the inhibitions in the act of March 5, 1862, forbidding boards of county commissioners and county clerks from issuing county warrants in any one year in excess of the revenues to be derived from the tax levy for such year.

3. Where a conflict exists between a later and earlier act does not attempt to cover all the provisions of the earlier act, both acts ordinarily remain in force except on the point where the acts are in conflict in which respect the later act supercedes, repeals or modifies the inconsistent terms of the earlier enactment.

KO MODE Crowd in front of horse meat market in Paris.

So scarce and dear has meat become in Paris that a market selling nothing but horse meat has been established in that city. That many Parisians have reached the point where they must substitute horse meat for beef is evidenced by the crowd seen in the picture.
